Sex with Aliens? Read the First Computer Forensics/Electronic Evidence Blog Launched by Noted Author/Lecturer Sharon Nelson

Blog Intended to Educate the Public, the Media and the Legal Community about Electronic Evidence Matters

August 06, 2007 (Fairfax, Virginia) | Sensei Enterprises corporate officer and renowned e-evidence attorney Ms. Sharon D. Nelson, Esq. has recently launched a new computer forensics/electronic evidence blog entitled “Ride the Lightning.” This new blog has been developed to share electronic evidence news, to report and reflect upon current computer forensics and electronic discovery developments and to offer a light-hearted view of electronic evidence from the trenches.

“There really didn’t seem to be anyone doing on-the-ground computer forensics who was blogging, so there was a vacuum waiting to be filled,” Ms. Nelson states. Ms. Nelson has a long and established record of published writings — including two books she has co-authored pertaining to electronic evidence and information security. Her extensive experience in electronic evidence matters and her national reputation as an expert places her in an excellent position to provide regular news and information through a blog medium. “My hope through this blog is to help folks understand more about electronic evidence and to avoid the worst of the ‘geek-speak’ that makes it seem so incomprehensible. I also hope that I can make this subject fun to read about because it sure as heck is fun to come to work every day!”

The new electronic evidence blog can be accessed by the following URL: <http://ridethelightning.senseient.com/>
